

The RCMP's History

Quick Facts

- Prime Minister Sir John A. Macdonald used the Royal Irish Constabulary as the model for the RCMP.
- In 1903, the first Mounted Police post north of the Arctic Circle was established at Fort McPherson.
- The NWMP provided support for the successful construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the subsequent settlement of western Canada.
- In 1904, King Edward VII granted the Force the prefix 'Royal' in recognition of its many services to Canada and the Empire.
- The image of the scarlet-coated Mountie has been used to promote Canada abroad since the 1880s.
- In the 1990s, the RCMP's role in peace-keeping expanded significantly in countries such as Haiti, Namibia, Kosovo and East Timor.

Overview

Born out of a need for a national police service to enforce the law in Canada's newly acquired western territories, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has evolved into a world-renowned organization of more than 22,000 employees.

The Roots of an Institution

In May 1873, the Parliament of Canada established a central police force. One hundred and fifty recruits were sent west to Manitoba. The new police force was named North-West Mounted Police (NWMP).

In July 1874, 275 mounted police officers marched west headed for southern Alberta, where American whisky traders were operating among the Aboriginal people.

A permanent post with half the NWMP was established at Fort Macleod, Alberta. Part of the remaining half of the Force was sent to Fort Edmonton and the rest returned east to Fort Ellice, Manitoba, which had been designated as headquarters. The following summer, Fort Calgary established on the Bow River in Alberta, and Fort Walsh in Saskatchewan's Cypress Hills.

By 1885, the NWMP had grown to 1,000 men, but in 1896 its future was threatened by the newly elected Prime Minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who decided to reduce and eventually disband the Force. Support for the NWMP in the west prevailed, and it gained new prominence policing the Klondike Gold Rush.

From 1905-16, the RNWMP was contracted to police the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. These contracts ended due to the provinces' desire to create their own police services.

Building a Legacy

In 1919, Parliament voted to merge the RNWMP with the Dominion Police, a federal police force with jurisdiction in eastern Canada. When the legislation took effect on February 1, 1920, the name became the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and headquarters were moved to Ottawa from Regina.

The Mounted Police returned to provincial policing with a new contract with Saskatchewan in 1928.

From 1932-38, the size of the RCMP nearly doubled, to 2,350, as it took over provincial policing in Alberta, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

The years following World War II saw a continued expansion of the RCMP's role as a provincial police service. In 1950, it assumed responsibility for provincial policing in Newfoundland and absorbed the British Columbia Provincial Police.

In 1961, the RCMP established national crime intelligence units across the country.

Women were first accepted as uniformed members in 1974. The seventies also brought an expansion of responsibilities in areas such as airport policing, VIP security and drug enforcement.

Today, the RCMP's scope of operations includes organized crime, terrorism, illicit drugs, economic crimes and offences that threaten the integrity of Canada's national borders. The RCMP also protects VIPs, has jurisdiction in eight provinces and three territories and, through its National Police Services, offers resources to other Canadian law enforcement agencies.