FOREWORD

Over 17 years have passed since the Canadian Intergovernmental Conference Secretariat (CICS) published "Federal-Provincial First Ministers' Conferences 1906-1985". During that time First Ministers have met formally on 19 different occasions. These include the Annual Conferences of First Ministers under the 1985 Regina Accord, and three conferences on the Constitution, one of which dealt with Aboriginal Constitutional Matters. Since the February 1992 Meeting on the Economy, all of the meetings have been closed, usually followed immediately by a press conference. In an effort to denote a somewhat less formal format, since 1990 the title has been changed to "First Ministers' Meeting" (instead of "Conference"). Most of those meetings have focussed on single, broad issues such as Internal Trade (1994), Social Policy Renewal and Social Union Framework Agreement (1997 and 1999 respectively), and Health Care funding in 2000, 2003 and 2004.

Information in the volume is based on official conference records where available, as well as on our own records for those meetings that took place after 1967 which were administered by the Secretariat or its predecessor the Secretariat of the Constitutional Conference. Other useful sources were also consulted. These include the Privy Council Office, the Department of Finance, the Public Archives and the National Library of Canada, and the Library of Parliament.

Although the first Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers following Confederation is identified as taking place in 1906, meetings of provincial First Ministers occurred prior to that date. (For information on this and later Premiers' meetings see the CICS publication "Premiers' Conferences" available on our website at www.scics.gc.ca). Readers should note that the present volume is limited to meetings of First Ministers that were federal-provincial (more recently federal-provincial-territorial) and national in scope, and where the arrangements in each case reflected an intention by the First Ministers to meet in a formal intergovernmental format. Not included, therefore, are informal, bilateral, or regional meetings of First Ministers.

As the agency responsible for providing administrative services to meetings of First Ministers the Secretariat hopes that the information provided here will be useful to those interested in this significant aspect of Canadian federalism. The information in this volume will be made available electronically on our website at www.scics.gc.ca.

CICS believes this information to be authoritative but accepts responsibility for any error or omission.

I would like to acknowledge and thank members of the Secretariat staff who brought this publication to fruition, and in particular Jane Dubé, Ghislaine Labonté, Stephen Nemeth, and Nicole Henrie, with comments from André McArdle and translation by Gilles Boileau. We are all greatly indebted to Andre Millar on whose work the first volume was based.

NOTES

- This was the first federal-provincial Conference of First Ministers held following Confederation. It was convened by the Prime Minister of Canada following a request by the provinces. Earlier conferences of provincial Premiers took place in 1887 and 1902.
- Following the Prime Minister's welcoming address the Conference proceeded as an interprovincial meeting, subsequently suspending its proceedings on four different occasions so that delegates could meet the federal representatives in joint sessions.
- The Premier of Quebec was elected Chairman for proceedings of the joint sessions, and acted as Chairman for the other sessions as well.
- Nova Scotia was absent for the opening session, but attended subsequent proceedings.
- The Conference included a representative of the Imperial Parliament.
- The Conference sessions were closed.
- For further reference see Minutes of the Proceedings in Conference of the Representatives of Canada and of the Provinces, King's Printer, Ottawa, 1906 and D.T. Braidwood's A Survey of Dominion-Provincial Conferences 1906-1941, University of British Columbia, 1941.

A federal-provincial meeting to examine the respective federal and provincial powers regarding the incorporation of companies was held in Ottawa on March 29, 1910. The "Canadian Annual Review" for 1910 indicates that two First Ministers were present – the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of New Brunswick.

NOTES (continued)

A "National Industrial Conference of Dominion and Provincial Governments with Representative Employers and Labour Men, on the subjects of Industrial Relations and Labour Laws, and for the consideration of the Labour Features of the Treaty of Peace" was held in Ottawa from September 15 to 20, 1919. An examination of the official report of proceedings for this meeting indicates that it was not seen as a Conference of First Ministers (only three attended), but rather as a conference convened to bring together delegates representing the interests of both employers and employees throughout Canada with representatives of the federal and provincial governments.

NOTES

- The Prime Minister referred to the arrangements for the discussion of the agenda as being based "upon those that have been found to be so successful in Imperial Conferences and other intergovernmental meetings." He also referred to the meeting as the eighth Dominion-Provincial Conference held since Confederation.
- The Conference met in a plenary session on the morning of December 9 to adopt the agenda and form six sub-conferences to deal with the following matters: Tourist Traffic; Mining Development and Taxation; Agriculture and Marketing; Constitutional Questions; Unemployment and Relief; and Financial Questions. The Conference reconvened in plenary session on the afternoon of December 13. The intervening period was devoted to meetings of the sub-conferences, whose reports were presented at the closing plenary session. Each sub-conference was chaired by a federal minister.
- The opening session of the Conference was open, but meetings of the sub-conferences were closed.

- In his closing remarks, the Prime Minister said that he appreciated “the attitude of the members in endorsing...the idea of keeping the conference essentially a conference...A mistake that has too frequently existed in the past...has been the belief that unless matters were definitely and finally settled at the time of the conference, the conference itself had not been a success.” Earlier in the closing session, Mr. King had stated that it was “important to bear in mind the true nature of present proceedings. A Dominion-Provincial conference is neither a cabinet nor a parliament. It is an institution which enables representatives of the Government of the Dominion of Canada and the governments of the provinces of Canada to confer together, exchange information and opinions, and formulate proposals, in respect to Dominion-Provincial co-operation, which can be presented to the governments concerned and to the Parliament of Canada and legislatures of the provinces.”

Rt. Hon. Mackenzie King and the Provincial Premiers at the Dominion-Provincial Conference

No Conference communiqué issued.

NOTES

- The Conference opened with general statements by the federal and provincial governments. It then adjourned so that an agenda committee could meet to discuss the agenda to be followed subsequently, and the question of meetings of committees to consider various aspects of the Royal Commission's report.
- The Conference reconvened in the afternoon of January 15 to receive the agenda committee's report. As three Premiers stated that they would refuse to sit on committees to discuss matters predicated upon the Rowell-Sirois report, no committee was recommended for appointment. The four working committees — on finance, labour and unemployment, special problems and constitutional matters — which had been proposed by the federal government prior to the Conference therefore did not meet.
- Following the receipt of the agenda committee's report, the federal minister of Finance made a statement on the financial position of Canada and the measures adversely affecting provincial revenues the federal government would have to take if the Royal Commission report was not adopted.
- After further discussion and debate and the indication that three provinces would be absent if the Conference reconvened the following day, the Chairman concluded that there should be no attempt to proceed further, and the meeting was closed with the singing of the national anthem.
- The Conference sessions were closed during the morning of January 15 but open on January 14 and in the afternoon of January 15.

No Conference communiqué issued.

NOTES

- The Dominion-Provincial Conference on Reconstruction held two plenary sessions, August 6-10, 1945 and April 29 – May 3, 1946 (each is dealt with as a separate Conference in this volume). In the intervening period the Conference's Coordinating Committee met on three occasions as follows: November 26-30, 1945; January 28 – February 1, 1946 and April 25-26, 1946.
- In his opening remarks the Prime Minister of Canada referred to the purpose of the Conference as being "an effort to ensure the maximum of cooperation between the Federal government and the governments of the provinces in order that the Canadian people, working together, may achieve the constructive goals of peace", adding that the meeting "may well be the most important Canadian Conference since Confederation".
- A comprehensive set of proposals for a federal-provincial agreement was submitted to the Conference by the federal government at the opening of proceedings. Some provinces submitted proposals as well, with others making informal statements. A Coordinating Committee was established to study the proposals and to report to the next plenary session of the Conference. The Coordinating Committee was comprised of the Prime Minister of Canada, the three federal ministers of Justice, Finance and Reconstruction and the nine Premiers.
- The Steering Committee of the Conference, whose functions were to supervise and co-ordinate the work of all the continuing committees to be established by the Conference and to recommend the establishment of additional committees as may be thought desirable, met privately on August 8. Full sittings of the Conference at other times were open.

Most premiers were reported to agree that the new agreement was better than the one suggested at the last Conference. However, because it gave the provinces the smallest increase in revenue in recent years, the federal government still received a lot of criticism.

- A Consensus on Language Rights was adopted by the Conference, as well as a decision taken to undertake a process of constitutional review through a continuing Constitutional Conference of First Ministers and a Continuing Committee of Officials to assist the Conference in its work. The Conference also agreed that a Secretariat should be established to serve both the Constitutional Conference and the Continuing Committee of Officials, and that the following questions should be examined by the Conference and Committee: official languages, fundamental rights, distribution of powers, reform of institutions linked with federalism including the Senate and Supreme Court of Canada, regional disparities, the amending procedure and provisional arrangements, and mechanisms of federal-provincial relations.

- For further reference see The Constitutional Review 1968-1971, Secretary's Report, Canadian Intergovernmental Conference Secretariat, Ottawa, 1974.

This Conference marked the beginning of the most comprehensive attempt at constitutional review since Confederation. The Constitutional Conference and the committees of ministers and officials established to support it, were to meet continuously for the next three years until terminated by the failure to reach agreement at the Conference held in Victoria, British Columbia, in June 1971.

- The Conference sessions were closed, except for the morning of June 14 which was devoted to opening statements.
- The Conference agreed that new, proposed constitutional provisions which it had incorporated in a document named the Canadian Constitutional Charter 1971 should be reported to all governments for consideration. The Charter was to be treated as a whole, and governments were asked to communicate their acceptance to the Secretary of the Conference by June 28, 1971, after which it would be recommended to the Legislative Assemblies and to Parliament. The Charter included constitutional provisions regarding "Political Rights", "Language Rights", "Provinces and Territories", the "Supreme Court of Canada", "Courts of Canada", a "Revised Section 94A" (income security), "Regional Disparities", "Federal-Provincial Consultation", "Amendments to the Constitution" and "Modernization of the Constitution".

- For further reference see The Constitutional Review 1968-1971, Secretary's Report, Canadian Intergovernmental Conference Secretariat, Ottawa, 1974.

By June 28 all governments except Quebec and Saskatchewan had advised the Secretariat that the Charter was acceptable. On June 23 Quebec informed the Secretary that it could not recommend the Charter to its National Assembly because of the clauses dealing with income security. This resulted in eventually arresting for several years the process of constitutional review and patriation of the constitution.

NOTES

- The Conference was convened as a result of Section 37 of the Constitution Act, 1982 which specified that a constitutional conference should be called within one year of the provision coming into force, and that the conference should include “an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item” . Section 37 went on to stipulate that “elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories” should also be invited to participate in the discussions on any item on the conference agenda that “in the opinion of the Prime Minister directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories” . Consequently, at the table with the 11 Canadian First Ministers, were the representatives of the four national Canadian aboriginal associations and of the two Territorial governments, each of the six groups attending as a Conference delegation.
- Quebec explained that its presence at the Conference, which had been convened under the patriated constitution, should not be interpreted as an implicit recognition of that constitution by Quebec which did not recognize its legitimacy.
- The Conference sessions were open, and the proceedings began with the Chairman giving the floor to the Assembly of First Nations which had requested the recitation of a traditional Indian prayer. The Chairman also noted that the agenda had been developed together with representatives of the aboriginal peoples.
- Official observers were invited, as in the February 2-5, 1982 conference.
- At the close of the Conference, the “1983 Constitutional Accord on Aboriginal Rights” was signed by all delegations except Quebec. The Accord provided that a constitutional Conference of First Ministers, including representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada and of the Territorial governments, should be convened within one year; and that the Constitution Act, 1982 should be amended to provide, among other things, for two additional First Ministers’ Conferences by April 17, 1987 to discuss aboriginal constitutional matters. (That amendment, subsequently effected, became the first modification to the Canadian constitution under the terms of the amending formula agreed upon at the FMC of November 1981.)
- A Verbatim Transcript was prepared for the open sessions.

Conference communiqué

- The 11 First Ministers signed a "Memorandum of Agreement" (later known as the "Regina Accord") in which they undertook to meet at least once a year as the "Annual Conference of First Ministers" to, among other things, review the state of federal-provincial relations, consult on the state of the economy and consider broad objectives for governments in Canada. The agreement stipulated that it would be in effect for five years, and that it was renewable for a similar period.

NOTES

- This was the first federal-provincial FMC held outside Ottawa since 1971. In his opening remarks the Chairman noted that in the past most FMC's had been held in Ottawa, and indicated that in his judgment efforts should be made to hold major federal-provincial meetings elsewhere as well, in order to recognize Canada's regional diversity.
- The Conference sessions were open.
- The Government Leaders of Yukon and the Northwest Territories, who were present as official observers, were invited by the Chairman to address the Conference.
- A Verbatim Transcript was prepared for the open sessions.

First Ministers' Conference on the Constitution in session

No Conference communiqué issued.

NOTES

- The Conference was a ceremonial event for the signing of the “1987 Constitutional Accord”.
- The First Ministers had previously met privately and informally, first at Meech Lake near Ottawa on April 30, and subsequently at the Langevin Block in Ottawa on June 2 until 5:30 a.m. on the morning of the Conference on June 3.
- The Langevin Block meeting resulted in a unanimous agreement on the Accord, which was signed at the Conference Centre seven hours later together with statements by each First Minister.
- The “1987 Constitutional Accord” set out constitutional amendments to “bring about the full and active participation of Quebec in Canada’s constitutional evolution...”, and committed the federal and provincial governments to proceed with a resolution in Parliament and the legislative assemblies to amend the constitution accordingly. The proposed amendments were extensive. They provided for:
 - The recognition of Quebec’s distinct society;
 - Provincial participation in appointments to the Senate and the Supreme Court of Canada and the constitutional recognition of the Court;
 - The negotiation of federal-provincial agreements on immigration;
 - Compensation to provinces not participating in shared-cost programs in areas of provincial jurisdiction;
 - Changes to the amending formula with respect to matters requiring unanimous consent;
 - Compensation following a transfer of provincial powers to Parliament; and
 - Annual Conferences of First Ministers on the economy and the constitution.
- The Conference session was open. No official observers had been invited, since the event was a continuation of the previous closed proceedings at the Langevin Block.
- A Verbatim Transcript was prepared for the open session.

I will instruct Senator Murray to meet with provincial representatives to explore the possibility of movement on the Meech Lake Accord. Having been given complete support by First Ministers, Senator Murray will intensify and seek to accelerate the process of meaningful Senate reform started in Saskatoon... If progress is deemed appropriate on the provisions of the Meech Lake Accord, a further meeting of First Ministers will be convened by the Prime Minister to deal with this matter."

 - Aboriginal Constitutional Issues
 - Agenda for Future Constitutional Discussions

 - New Brunswick Amendment

NOTES

- Under the provisions of the amending formula in the Constitution Act 1982, the deadline for the ratification of the Constitutional Amendment 1987 (Meech Lake Accord) was June 23, 1990. By late May 1990, the Accord still required ratification by the legislatures of Manitoba, New Brunswick and Newfoundland in order to come into effect.

- In an effort to achieve consensus on the Accord, the Prime Minister invited the Premiers to a working dinner on Sunday, June 3, to be followed by a First Ministers' Conference the next morning if the discussions went well.
- The dinner was held at the Museum of Civilization in Hull, Quebec. This was followed by private meetings of First Ministers in the Centennial Room of the Conference Centre beginning on the morning of Monday, June 4, and continuing each day until the evening of Saturday, June 9, when an open session was convened. That session ran for approximately 2³/₄ hours into the early morning of June 10.
- The open session began with the signing of the 1990 Constitutional Agreement which provided the following:
 - An undertaking by the Premiers of New Brunswick, Manitoba and Newfoundland to submit the Meech Lake Accord for "appropriate legislative or public consideration and to use every possible effort to achieve decision prior to June 23, 1990". (Premier Wells of Newfoundland signed with the proviso that he would fully endorse the Agreement if the Meech Lake Accord was "given legislative or public approval following the consultation provided for in Part I".)

After Proclamation of the Meech Lake Accord

- Formation of a national Commission on Senate Reform to conduct hearings and to report prior to an FMC to be held at the end of 1990 in British Columbia to consider specific proposals that would give effect to the objective of the Senate with elected members, more equitable representation and effective powers.
- A commitment to Senate reform as the key constitutional priority until comprehensive reform is achieved.
- Agreement to seek adoption of an amendment on comprehensive Senate reform by July 1, 1995. If that objective was not achieved then specific changes in Senate representation by province were provided for.
- Agreement to make constitutional amendments on the following:
 - Sexual equality rights
 - The role of the Territories in appointments to the Senate and Supreme Court and in constitutional and economic conferences
 - A New Brunswick amendment on the equality of status for the English and French languages
 - First Ministers' Conferences on aboriginal constitutional issues to be held every three years
 - (Constitutional legal texts on these issues were appended)
- Agreement on the following agenda items for future constitutional discussions:
 - Creation of new provinces in the territories
 - Consideration of constitutional recognitions (Canada clause)
 - Review entire process of amending the Constitution
- The Government Leader of each Territory, present as an official observer, addressed the Conference.
- A Verbatim Transcript was prepared for the open sessions.

The Meech Lake Accord did not receive the necessary number of ratifications in time and therefore the 1990 Constitutional Agreement did not come into effect.

- The dates and location for this meeting had originally been scheduled for the 33rd Annual Premiers' Conference (APC). - A companion document to the Consensus Report titled “Final Political Accords” was also released which described the elements of a political accord or accords that will accompany the constitutional amendments, as well as intergovernmental agreements that may be negotiated pursuant to these amendments.
- At the close of the First Ministers’ Meeting on the Constitution, Premier Ghiz of Prince Edward Island convened a brief meeting of the 33rd Annual Premiers’ Conference. All Provincial Premiers and the Government Leaders of the two Territories were present. The Leaders of two Aboriginal Groups (the Assembly of First Nations and the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada) attended as guests. There was discussion of possible agenda items for a Premiers’ meeting proposed for later in the fall. (That proposed meeting was not convened.) The meeting was then adjourned in order for the participants to attend the press conference on the Constitutional Agreement.
- After the meeting, the Prime Minister held a press conference and was followed in turn by the provincial Premiers.
- A Draft Legal Text based on the Charlottetown Accord was released on October 9, 1992.

A National Referendum took place on October 26, 1992 to determine if the Agreement would be approved. The majority of Canadians voted against the Charlottetown Accord and it was therefore rejected.
