Cabin with Tree Growing from Sod Roof, was located on Lower Black Hills Creek, Yukon

Jim Robb had one hour to make the drawing of this cabin in 1980, (it was painted later). The helicopter was to arrive back to pick him up in that time. Larry Barr's company, The Territorial Gold Placers had commissioned Jim to do a series of paintings back then. Barr wanted Jim to record what was still on the creeks before many artifacts probably would be bulldozed because of increased mining activity due to the muchly rised gold prices at that time.

The cabin's gone now, the ground was mined in the recent past. By the way the ground was quite rich.

A Message from the President of the Yukon Chamber of Mines

The Yukon Chamber of Mines is dedicated to promoting and supporting the rights of free miners and explorationists throughout the Yukon Territory. For the past four years mineral exploration has experienced phenomenal growth in the Yukon and we are excited by the positive prospects for the future.

We are pleased to once again offer the conveniences provided by this directory. The donations and hard work of our members and supporters ensure the quality and timeliness of the Yukon Mining & Exploration Directory and I hope that you will return their efforts in kind.

It's a new day for Mining in the Yukon and the Yukon Chamber of Mines is very proud to be a part of your continued efforts and successes in the Territory. We wish you luck in your endeavours and sincerely thank you for your continued support for our organization.

Sincerely

John Witham
President

The Yukon Surface Rights Board (YSRB) is a federal board whose primary role is to resolve access disputes between those with an ownership or interest in land (surface rights holders) and those with access rights to the land. The YSRB gets involved in disputes only when the parties are unable to reach an agreement, and a party applies to the Board. The Board offers mediation and, failing mediation, conducts hearings on matters related to:

- Access disputes between surface rights holders and subsurface rights holders on all Yukon lands.
- Access to and crossing over of FN Settlement Lands for personal, commercial, and other purposes.
- Disputes over security for activities occurring on quartz and placer claims.
- Disputes over specified substances such as earth, clay, shale, gypsum, gravel and marl.
- Disputes related to quarries.
- Expropriation of First Nation Settlement Land.
- Disputes over compensation for activities occurring on quartz and placer claims.

The Overland Trail (aka The Dawson Trail)

By Ken Spotswood
Whitehorse to Dawson

It all started with a little problem on the river . . .

During the Klondike Gold Rush and for years after, the quickest way to get from Whitehorse to Dawson City was by boat along the Yukon River. In those days life in the territory was governed by whether the river was open or frozen. Once winter set in and the river froze, only experienced mushers and dog teams braved the journey. Late fall and early winter travel was limited to snowshoes, horse and dog teams. Transportation was slow and costly. The cold reduced travel to a minimum.

During the winter of 1899 - 1900 the Canadian Development Company used dog teams to carry mail and light freight along the river between Whitehorse and Dawson. It gradually replaced the dogs with horses the following year. In 1901 the White Pass & Yukon Route Railway bought out the company in order to get the lucrative government mail contract for its sternwheelers.

In 1902 the Yukon government contracted the White Pass & Yukon Route to build the first winter road between the two communities. Construction began that summer and the road was completed in November. It was 330 miles long - shorter than the river route by about 70 miles - and was built at a cost of $129,000.

Using only axes and cross-cut saws, the company's small crew of men cleared a 12-foot right-of-way along the entire distance. Aided by horses, they graded the surface with plows and wheel scrapers, built culverts where necessary, and reinforced embankments with rough timber. The road builders used traditional First Nations trails whenever possible, most likely in the Takhini River Valley and the Nordenskiöld valley between Braeburn and Carmacks.

The winter road between Whitehorse and Dawson became known as the Overland Trail. The White Pass then inaugurated the Yukon Stage Line which, because of the mail it carried, was also called The Royal Mail Service. It marked the beginning of a new era of transportation in the territory. For Dawson residents, it created a much-needed winter link to civilization. For the first time they were not cut off from the rest of the world for almost eight months of the year.

The Overland Trail was not a single, uninterrupted stretch of road. It was actually five sections of road divided by four major rivers - the Takhini, Yukon, Pelly and Stewart.

From Whitehorse the original trail headed west, crossed the Takhini River, followed the Klusha and Little rivers to Braeburn, then along the Nordenskiöld River and into Carmacks. At Mackay's, which was later renamed Yukon Crossing, the trail crossed the Yukon River and then followed the east bank to Pelly, where it crossed the Pelly River. On the north side of the Pelly it ran northwest to Stewart Crossing (not to be confused with the current site of Stewart Crossing) and over the Stewart River to Wounded Moose. From there the trail branched off at the Indian River and finally to Dawson via Eldorado and Bonanza Creeks.

Over the years the route was changed numerous times to provide access to new mining camps that sprang up in the territory. When Mayo became a busy mining camp in 1912, the road branched off at Minto. A new branch was built to Mayo, while the main route to Dawson angled northeast to the Stewart River, then went up the Slough Creek Valley and down Flat Creek into the Klondike Valley.

Between 1902 and 1914, after the close of river navigation, the White Pass Stage Line ran its sleighs and stages three times a week between Whitehorse and Dawson. In March, when business people were eager to get to Dawson before steamboat traffic began, daily service was provided.
