What is FINTRAC?

The Financial Transactions and Reports Analysis Centre of Canada (FINTRAC), is Canada's financial intelligence unit, a government agency created to collect, analyze and disclose financial intelligence on suspected money laundering and terrorist financing activities. Created in July 2000, FINTRAC is an integral part of our country's fight against the global crimes of money laundering and the financing of terrorist activities.

FINTRAC is an independent agency, operating at arm's length from the police and other departments and agencies of government to whom it can provide financial intelligence (e.g., the Canadian Security Intelligence Service).

What does FINTRAC do?

FINTRAC collects reports on financial transactions from numerous entities and subjects them to rigorous analysis. These reports contain information on suspicious or large cash financial transactions, international electronic funds transfers, as well as on the cross-border movements of currency and monetary instruments. When FINTRAC determines, on the basis of its analysis, that there are reasonable grounds to suspect its information would be relevant to investigating or prosecuting a money laundering or terrorist financing offence, it will disclose key identifying information to law enforcement. Likewise, when it suspects the information would be relevant to threats to the security of Canada, it will disclose the information to CSIS.

How does FINTRAC assist law enforcement and security agencies?

Although it operates at arm's length from law enforcement, FINTRAC's primary role is to provide law enforcement and CSIS with high quality leads to help them with their investigations and prosecutions.

FINTRAC uses skilled financial analysts and leading-edge technology to provide law enforcement with high calibre financial intelligence. This helps them to zero in on the likeliest suspects. If more information than what is contained in the initial disclosure is required, FINTRAC will disclose the remaining contents of its analysis if presented with a court order.

FINTRAC also expects to play a strong leadership role in the international fight against organized crime and terrorism. Factors such as the growth in world travel, trade and immigration, and the growing popularity of electronic transactions have aided organized crime and terrorist groups. In that vein, FINTRAC has the ability to exchange financial intelligence with its international counterparts after entering into Memoranda of Understanding with these organizations.

How does FINTRAC protect privacy?

FINTRAC is required by law to protect the personal information it receives from unauthorized disclosure. To that end, FINTRAC has put in place rigorous internal and external security measures to ensure that the reports and information it receives are held in the strictest of confidence. As well, the law provides for criminal penalties against any FINTRAC employee who unlawfully discloses information.

The creation of FINTRAC allowed lawmakers to balance privacy rights and the needs of the law enforcement and security communities.

Money laundering

Money laundering is the process used to disguise the source of money or assets derived from criminal activity. Profit-motivated crimes span a variety of illegal activities from drug trafficking and smuggling to fraud, extortion and corruption. The illicit profits and proceeds from these crimes must be laundered to be enjoyed. The scope of criminal proceeds is significant—the International Monetary Fund (IMF) estimated that some $500 billion (U.S.) is laundered worldwide each year.

Money laundering is a global phenomenon, and the techniques used are numerous and can be very sophisticated. Technological advances in e-commerce, the global diversification of financial markets and new financial product developments provide further opportunities to launder illegal profits and obscure the money trail leading back to the underlying crime.

Who must report to FINTRAC?

The following persons and entities must report suspicious and certain other transactions to FINTRAC:

- financial entities (includes banks, credit unions, caisses populaires, trust and loan companies and agents of the Crown that accept deposit liabilities);
- life insurance companies, brokers or agents;
- securities dealers, portfolio managers and investment counsellors who are provincially authorized;
- persons engaged in the business of foreign exchange dealing;
- money services businesses;
- accountants and accounting firms (when carrying out certain activities on behalf of their clients);
- real estate brokers and sales representatives (when carrying out certain activities on behalf of their clients);
- casinos; and
- individuals, whether a Canadian citizen or not, and any entity who is importing or exporting currency or monetary instruments of $10,000 or more.

What is reported?

- Suspicious transactions related to money laundering and terrorist financing;
- Terrorist property;
- Large cash transactions of $10,000 or more;
- International electronic funds transfers of $10,000 or more; and
- Cross-border currency or monetary instruments of $10,000 or more.

There are also other regulatory requirements such as:

- Client identification;
- Record keeping; and
- The implementation of a compliance regime.

Terrorist financing

Terrorist financing operates somewhat differently from money laundering but no less insidiously. While terrorist groups do generate funds from criminal activities such as drug trafficking and arms smuggling, they also frequently obtain revenue through legal means. Supporters of terrorist causes may, for example, raise funds from their local communities by hosting events or membership drives. In addition, some charity or relief organizations may unwittingly become the conduit through which donors contribute funds that may eventually be used to commit a terrorist act. The funds are then routed to the recipient terrorist organizations through both informal networks and the formal financial system.

Terrorist activities constitute threats to our country's safety and security. An effective response involves, among other things, efforts to detect and curtail the flow of money needed to finance such activities.

Reporting Voluntary Information

In addition, FINTRAC can receive information about suspicions of money laundering or terrorist financing that is provided voluntarily.
