General Information

Postponing Repayment of Your Student Loan Debt

If you are pursuing postdoctoral studies after earning a doctoral degree (Ph. D.) and are experiencing financial hardship, you may postpone the repayment of your student loan debt. This benefit applies only to student loans awarded under the Loans and Bursaries Program or the Loans Program for Part-Time Studies and not to computer loans granted under the Computer Loan Guarantee Program.

Eligibility Conditions and Requirements.

On the date of your application, your gross monthly income must not exceed the maximum amount indicated for your family situation (see following table.)

If your postdoctoral studies are to last more than 12 months, you must reapply for this benefit after each 12-month period by submitting a new application.

Maximum gross monthly income according to family situation, as of May 1, 2004

Individual without dependent child	Maximum gross monthly income*	$1 195
Individual with dependent child(ren)	Number of children	1	2	3	4
	Maximum gross monthly income*	$1 410	$1 610	$1 810	$2 010
Single parent with	Number of children	1	2	3	4
dependent child(ren)	Maximum gross monthly income*	$1 520	$1 720	$1 920	$2 120

* If you are paid weekly, multiply your weekly pay by 4.33 to get your gross monthly income. If you are paid every two weeks, multiply your pay by 2.16.

** To determine your maximum gross monthly income, add $200 to the amount in the table for each additional child.

Instructions for Completing the Form.

If you are on a fellowship program, you must provide a copy of the document issued by your funding organization confirming that you have been awarded a postdoctoral fellowship.

If you are not on a fellowship program, you must provide proof of your income (e.g. copy of your employment contract) and a document from your educational institution confirming that you are a postdoctoral student.
