

I would like to see some sort of 'fine lines' criteria for storm days! With the recent storm days we are having, we are seeing many employees risk their lives and perhaps others by going to work in totally unsafe road/visibility conditions. These employees are attempting to get to work in order not to lose a day's wage. Hourly paid employees seem to lose out on this aspect, whereas salary paid (management) stay home and do not lose a thing. I would hope there could be something implemented where there could be a set number of storm days paid per year. Perhaps follow the school closures as a guide? I hope for change, before someone dies on the road for a single day's pay.

Thanks, Cheryl Mangin
