Making the Link between FIS and Results for Canadians

Just as the roots of a tree provide a solid foundation for growth, FIS will provide a solid underpinning for Modern Comptrollership, and contribute to realizing Results for Canadians.

The Financial Information Strategy (FIS)

is putting in place the tools, including people, policies and systems to produce better financial information and better financial analysis to aid in the decision-making process, with the ultimate goal of improving government's performance in the management of resources.

The information generated by FIS will be essential to achieving Modern Comptrollership. In addition to its contributions to making Modern Comptrollership possible, the information generated by FIS will assist in Improved Reporting to Parliament.

is concerned with the sound management of resources with a focus on results, emphasizing the need to integrate performance information, both financial and non-financial, for more effective decision making. Its components are: Leadership, People, Values and Ethics, Performance Information, Risk Management, Stewardship, and Accountability.

Of these, Performance Information, Stewardship, Accountability, and, to a degree, Mature Risk Management rely directly on information flowing from FIS. Modern Comptrollership, in turn, is a key ingredient of Results for Canadians.

Results for Canadians is the management framework for the Government of Canada and an agenda for change, setting out the government's commitments and how they will be met. Priority initiatives are: Citizen centred Service Delivery, Government On-Line, Modern Comptrollership, Improved Reporting to Parliament, Program Integrity, and Developing an Exemplary Workplace.

The ultimate goal of Results for Canadians is to improve service and accountability to the Canadian people.
