Area Overview

Cypress County is a large, rural municipality with a diversified economy and a large tax base. The population in 2001 was 6,235 people.

Cypress County is a dynamic, friendly place to do business with strong growth potential. The area is growing rapidly due to an influx of migrants from Saskatchewan and other areas. There are business opportunities in the oil and gas and agricultural sectors of the community, and Cypress County has a skilled, highly adaptable labour force. Couple these opportunities with low land values, low utility rates, and some of the lowest property taxes in the province and there is an unbeatable combination of features for economic growth and development.

Economic Facts

Approximately 55% of the land area is held in long term government leases. The proportion of the land held in this manner has declined as the government has moved to sell some of this land to current lessees. Most of this land is held in the form of unimproved pasture used for grazing. Only 28% of the total area of the District is improved. There has been a gradual tendency for unimproved pasture to be turned into improved pasture and a slight decline in the incidence of summer fallow.

The major agricultural crop continues to be wheat but the total acreage has declined by approximately 4% in response to lower prices. Farmers have moved to fill the gap with oil seeds, particularly canola, being the most notable successor crop. The development of an alfalfa dehydrating plant at Seven Persons has resulted in a significant increase in the total acreage of alfalfa grown in the irrigated areas. There has also been a steady expansion in the number of greenhouses in the District capitalizing on the District's favourable climate and low utility rates.

Livestock numbers have continued to increase but hogs, instead of cattle, have shown the greatest growth. Such diversification is good for the local economy. The total farming area is 2.5 million acres and over 63,000 of those are irrigated (Source: Census of Canada, 2001).
