Alberta

Solicitors with Alberta Justice are involved in wide range of legal and policy activities. They provide legal advice to the many government departments from the earliest stages of policy formulation to the final stage of legislative drafting. They assist the departments in performing their varied functions by providing advice. This advice ensures that departments establish policies and make decisions in accordance with the principles and procedures set out in the applicable legislation or the principles of natural justice. The solicitors also draft the contracts and agreements that govern the client's relationship with others.

"No employer offers a greater variety of interesting and influential legal work."

Are you up for the challenge?

As part of our Legal Services Division, solicitors play an important role in providing essential legal services to the Government of Alberta.

- As the role of government in society becomes ever more complex, solicitors play an increasingly vital role in implementing government programs and initiatives.
- From Aboriginal to environmental law, from family law to wills and estates matters, and every conceivable area of law in between, a government solicitor has a unique opportunity to play a major role in not only interpreting the law, but in formulating it.
