

trust officer

Alberta

The mission of the Public Trustee is to protect and administer the property of dependent adults, minor children and deceased persons, where there is no one else able to act.

A Trust Officer's work is diverse and interesting and provides challenges that would satisfy those from a variety of educational backgrounds including law, business, social work and many others. The work has elements that touch on estate law, financial administration, general business knowledge as well as the requirements of other government programs. There is significant interaction with dependent adults, guardians, beneficiaries, bankers, lawyers and other professionals. Trust Officers work independently but are part of a supportive team and the expertise of each team member contributes to our overall success.

"I have direct contact with our clients, and take great pride in using my legal training to provide solutions and assistance to persons who may not be able to act on their own behalf."

Are you up for the challenge?

Trust Officers provide a valuable public service to Albertans.

- The role would appeal to someone who wants to apply expert knowledge to help protect the financial interests of those who cannot act for themselves.
- Although the work is difficult and demanding, a Trust Officer experiences great satisfaction in applying knowledge and skill in a helping capacity.
