

Thanks Doc

This is how I feel about some doctors. Doctors are very courageous people. And it isn't easy giving medicine or needles to someone who isn't feeling good and doesn't want them. But they do it for your own good. It's hard doing things to people especially if it hurts.

On July 25, 2000 I got an L.P. (lumbar puncture). I was scared, but I didn't fuss. I was brave. I said thank you to the doctor because he did it so well. I'm not saying I never fussed when I began my treatments I hated everything and everyone. It's normal to feel like that. After a while you realize there is nothing you can say or do to stop from getting chemo or needles.

But if you relax during chemo or needles, the doctor does a better job. And if you say thanks that can make the doctors day!
