Fishing is one of the great outdoor experiences that Ontario residents and visitors to the province can enjoy year-round. With the Great Lakes, a quarter million inland lakes and countless rivers and streams, the opportunities are almost endless.

While fishing for some species, such as suckers and rock bass, can be pursued in many waters all year, angling for others, like walleye and trout, can occur only during set seasons to protect fish when they are spawning or particularly vulnerable. This regulation summary helps you know when, where and what you can catch so that you have an enjoyable time fishing while ensuring our fisheries remain sustainable.

Ontario's remote northern lakes are popular with many anglers, but the province's urban areas also host an impressive array of quality fishing opportunities. In addition to stocking fish near metropolitan centres, efforts are being made to improve fish habitat, provide better access and let people know where they can fish closer to home.

The government is committed to maintaining and enhancing our healthy, world-class fishery. The province is working to raise environmental awareness, ensure careful management and provide plentiful habitat. All anglers can take part by providing support to the myriad of conservation efforts undertaken across Ontario, particularly in their own communities.

Canada and Ontario continue to work together on improving the health of the Great Lakes environment under an agreement first signed some 30 years ago. Under this agreement, we are working with more than 260 partners on over 160 projects to rehabilitate fish and wildlife and their habitats, protect and restore wetlands, educate the public about invasive species, protect species at risk and gain a better understanding of Great Lakes basin ecosystems.

Let's all do our part to make sure that Ontario's excellent recreational fishery stays vibrant. By following the regulations, you help make sure that future generations can discover the joy of fishing.
