While the hearings in Walkerton were under way, Commissioner O'Connor also held town hall meetings in nine Ontario municipalities. In each community he toured the water treatment facilities. Here, he is being briefed at a water treatment plant in Ottawa. The plant visits and town halls were a component of the Part Two Report which deals with the future safety of Ontario's drinking water.

During pauses in the hearings in Walkerton, Commissioner O'Connor presided over a series of public meetings with experts and parties with standing. These were aimed at the broader water safety and management issues dealt with in the Part Two report.
