

Panya Clark Espinal - Clip 2

Support from my Family

It was a profession that was admired by members of my family. You know...I think that my father probably would have liked to have been a sculptor, you know and just, for whatever reasons, chose to be an architect...but he loves making sculpture and, you know, I just felt, I was encouraged to move in that direction. It's an admirable profession in my family, which, you know, I suppose when compared to other people I went to school with, it was a real struggle for them because their families really didn't support them making art. And I was one of the fortunate few that got the support from my family. So that added a lot, for sure.
