

James Rosenquist - Clip 5

Capillary Action II: “There were huge ceiling fans in the trees”

It's a rather abstract title, capillary action, like soaking up moisture. There were two paintings, there was another tree that had panels on the surface, and this one you have has a neon on the canvas that you could see through. It was more abstract.

I went to Texas, visiting my parents, they were living there for a while. I went to an amusement park called “Six Flags Over Texas”, and it was hotter than hell...and I walking into this amusement park, and I noticed in the trees outside, these huge ceiling fans in the trees outside, moving the trees. It really became an idea, was the world going to become an amusement park?

...and you wonder how, what kind of environment will a person have in the future or want to have in the future.

