

James Rosenquist - Clip 6

Off the Continental Divide: “Water goes to the East, and water goes to the West”

...it was really like throwing out reason and inaction and doing something. The book was upside down. You throw a book on the floor. It was like motivation, just to get up and go, just to leave your home and go somewhere or do something. I left home when I was 21 years old. That was it. I never went back. One way or another, you leave your home, you slip off the Continental Divide and Continental Divide is where water goes one way. It goes east or it goes west, the water from the Divide, the water goes to the east, the water goes to the west.

The coloured nails are, are you wasting time or building time? Are you marking off days, or are the nails building something. Hard to tell if you're wasting time, or building time.

