This month we've selected initiatives in Continuing Medical Education. This search is very simple to do in the database. Once you have entered the database, just type "continuing" in the "Focus/Interest" search box and then click the "SEARCH" button.

Another way to do the same search is to click on the button "OR Browse Focus", and then select the check box beside "CONTINUING MEDICAL EDUCATION", and next click on the "Choose" button to paste the term in the search window. As a final step, click the "SEARCH" button.

The results of this search are shown below.

A search guide for the database is also available at http://www.hc-sc.gc.ca/ohih-bis/res/init_guide_e.pdf

Success Stories

Nova Scotians Net Gain: DoctorsNS.com (NS)

Life in the Information Age would be easier if we could simply expand our memories by inserting a card, the same way we upgrade our computers. In health care, the flood of information available is particularly challenging.

"The average doctor needs about two million facts at their fingertips," says Dr. David Zitnick, Director of Medical Informatics at Dalhousie University. "To provide the best care, doctors need access to as much knowledge as possible; not just what's inside their heads."

For Nova Scotia physicians and their patients, DoctorsNS.com is a gateway to a wealth of information, ranging from health promotion news to extensive medical libraries. The site gives more than 1,900 members of the Medical Society of Nova Scotia -- Canada's oldest -- access to a well-stocked electronic bookshelf.

Penny Logan, the site's librarian, believes it levels the field for the province's doctors. "A large number of members don't work out of a university or major hospital. Our electronic bookshelf gives them quick and easy access to 500 full-text journals and 40 textbooks."

Also online is DXplain™ -- a decision-support service that uses a set of clinical findings to produce a ranked list of diagnoses that might explain a patient's symptoms -- and the MD Consult database of medical publications.

"These types of tools can help reduce the time to a great diagnosis," says Zitnick.

Both the members-only and public parts of DoctorsNS.com also have information about topics like palliative care, the risks associated with smoking and news items related to health promotion. The general public can use the site to locate a doctor in their area, while physicians can identify practice opportunities in the province.

"The site is designed to be the one source you need for issues and current thinking on health care," says Zitnick. "For example, it provides a link to the Romanow Commission on the Future of Health Care in Canada so Nova Scotians can have input and follow the issue."

"As we move into the future of electronic patient records, we see this type of site becoming a place where doctors and their patients can collaborate on managing health issues."
