Fishing that's worth the trip!

Of the more than 200,000 speckled trout that could be harvested annually at Réserve faunique de Port-Cartier–Sept-Îles, only 15% are actually caught. Thanks to pristine habitats and a scarcity of competing fish species, most of the lakes contain only indigenous speckled trout.

The conditions for speckled trout fishing in this first-rate territory are excellent:

- Daily catch limit: 20
- Average weight of trout caught: 180 grams each (350 grams and over in several lakes)
- Average catch per day, per fisher: 8 and over (over 12 in many lakes)

A Land of Plenty

Réserve faunique de Port-Cartier–Sept-Îles is a true natural heritage treasure of Québec. This intriguing wilderness area offers fishing that is simply outstanding. The abundance of fish allows for a daily catch limit of 20 speckled trout per fisher. The trout is indigenous and the pristine quality of its habitat ensures good reproduction of the species.

Over a hundred or so lakes and some fifteen rivers teeming with good-sized speckled trout and wriggling salmon (Rivière aux Rochers and Rivière MacDonald) await sport fishers who want to test their mettle against the whims of these feisty fish.

A land of rough and breathtaking terrain, Réserve faunique de Port-Cartier–Sept-Îles is a stirring destination sure to create lasting memories that you'll want to share.
