Polar Libraries Colloquy web site.

The Colloquy provides an international forum through which librarians and others concerned with the collection, preservation, and dissemination of information dealing with the Arctic and Antarctic regions, discuss issues of mutual interest and promote initiatives leading to improved collections and services.

Membership provides great opportunities to network with colleagues in other institutions. From its origin, the fostering of greater international collaboration has been a central objective.

The Colloquy meets biennially at venues by tradition alternating between Europe and North America, maintains this web site, an email discussion list, and a weblog.

Survey of Living Conditions in the Arctic: Inuit, Saami, and the Indigenous Peoples of Chukotka

A newly released survey of indigenous Arctic people indicates that a majority of the region's native people think traditional pursuits are important to their identity. Unique because it measured quality of life and involved them in data gathering, the survey also states a substantial portion of the people engage in traditional activities in addition to working in the cash economy .

The Survey of Living Conditions in the Arctic, or SLiCA, is an international joint effort of research and indigenous people to measure and understand living conditions in the Arctic. Indigenous peoples and researchers from the United States, Canada, Greenland, Norway, Sweden, Finland and the indigenous peoples of the Kola Peninsula and Chukotka in Russia have contributed to SLiCA

The aims of SLiCA are to:

- Measure living conditions in a way relevant to Arctic residents
- Document and compare the present state of living conditions among the indigenous peoples of the Arctic
- Improve the understanding of living conditions to the benefit of Arctic residents

SLiCA is an International Polar Year project and a part of the Arctic Human Health Initiative.
