The Arctic Institute of North America's Hydrocarbon Impacts database describes 5700 publications and research projects about the environmental impacts, socio-economic effects and regulation of hydrocarbon exploration, development and transportation in northern Canada. The database provides access to 35 years of accumulated knowledge about northern gas pipeline impacts, to which we are adding new publications as they are introduced at the Mackenzie Gas Project hearings.

Throughout 2006 the Joint Review Panel and the National Energy Board will be conducting an environmental assessment and regulatory review of the Mackenzie Gas Project, a $7 billion pipeline in northwest Canada to bring natural gas from the Mackenzie Delta to Alberta.

For an interest in how the Mackenzie Gas Project may affect the Northwest Territories, the Hydrocarbon Impacts database is an excellent guide to the relevant literature.
